A WASHINGTON letter says Representative GAINES of Tennessee is thinking of introducing again this year his bill for clean money. The Treasury Department is not opposed to his bill, and if the member from Tennessee shows any measure of earnestness, the bill can be passed. An officer of the Treasury, speaking of this very general desire on the part of the people for clean money, said—

"I believe that this Government ought to furnish its people with clean money. But I don't believe any of the nonsense that has been printed about the danger to health from handling dirty money. In the first place, the clerks who handle all the dirty money that comes in from all over the country for redemption have been handling this money for 50 years or more, and there never yet has been a case of sickness among them due to handling the money. Still stronger evidence that there is no danger to health is the fact that this Government has for 40 years or more been manufacturing the particular kind of paper on which the money is printed. The factory is in Massachusetts, and the most hardened stomach would be turned by a glance at some of the linen rags which are received there every day in manufacturing the paper. Heaven only knows where these rags come from—hospitals and every other conceivable place. The rags may be full of disease germs, never has there been a case of sickness among the boys through handling the rags. Still, the Treasury strongly in favor of clean money, because that would be the best safeguard of the people against counterfeiting. First thing a counterfeiter does after he has finished counterfeiting is to soil the note and make it look as as possible, for a dirty note is hard to detect, while one would be recognized by almost everyone who sees the money. My idea would be to have Congress law remitting the cost of transporting the currency to Washington to the Banks that send in the soiled for redemption. As a matter of fact, it is the ex-charges which Banks located at a distance from the money cities must pay for the transportation of the money to and from Washington that prevents the from having clean money. Here in Washington, it costs the Banks nothing to get new bills, you rarely find a soiled bill. If the Government were to enable the Banks to send their soiled notes to Washington free of charge and get clean money instead without any cost to them, I think every Bank in the country would be ready to enlist in the clean money crusade. It is true that even at present the Bureau of Engraving is running day and night to print the money that is needed, and if such a bill as I suggest should pass we would have to double the capacity of the Bureau. This would, of course, cost a lot of money, and the express charges which the Government would have to pay instead of the Banks would also amount to a heavy tax each year. But I think the people of this country would be perfectly willing to pay the cost if they could get clean money for their daily use."

WHILE the Legislature is honoring office-stealers and such like, it ought to set aside a day on which to canonize Tomcamel.

IF ex-Governor WILLIAM S. TAYLOR is half as bad a man as the Goebelites say he is, every Kentuckian ought to be glad that he is out of the state.

Down in Texas a Negro confessed that he killed a white man "just for fun;" and to keep the fun going, a mob took him away from the officers and hung him.

CHICAGO is getting real good. A jury in that city has awarded $17,000 damages to the children of a drunken father for redress against the saloonkeepers alleged to have made a drunkard of him.

THEY are already making it warm for Mayor DEMPSEY of Cincinnati. He appointed an unnaturalized citizen as his Private Secretary, and it is the general belief that, by an exhaustive search of the pollbooks of that city, he might have found a Democratic voter who could fill the bill.

The Taylor Case

Another View of It From an Indiana Standpoint

Washington (Ind.) Herald.

There is a rumor that another attempt is to be made by the authorities of Kentucky to induce the Governor of Indiana to grant a requisition in the case of ex-Governor Taylor of Kentucky, who is charged with complicity in the killing of William Goebel, defeated Democratic candidate for Governor of Kentucky, who usurped the office to which the people of Kentucky had elected Mr. Taylor. The theft of office through the power of the Goebelite Legislature was a high-handed robbery by methods as shameful as they were inexcusable. We suppose that there is not a Democrat in the state of Kentucky, outside of the Goebel faction, who will say that the action of Goebel and his henchmen was anything but downright piracy. There was no question of the election of Taylor, in spite of an unfair and infamous election law designed by Goebel to give his friends control of the election machinery.

Following this instance of political brigandage, probably without precedent in the United States, came the deplorable murder of Goebel. It was a monstrous crime, against which the indignation of every law-abiding citizen arises. Yet it must be admitted that Goebel's methods invited just such a tragic conclusion of his life. In politics he was unprincipled, and his own hands were wet with the blood of a neighbor. In a state where human life is so cheap, Goebel's lamentable end did not cause astonishment regardless of the horror of it. He took the sword and he perished with the sword.

After Goebel's murder naturally came the clamor of his partisans for blood. Governor Taylor, then depoeed, was accused of having instituted the killing. He fled the state and took refuge in Indiana. An appropriation of $100,000 was made by the Goebel Legislature to prosecute the accused persons. Repeated attempts were made to induce the Governor of Indiana, then the late James A. Mount, to consent to turn Taylor over to the Kentucky authorities. Governor Mount refused, as did his successor, Governor Durbin, and Taylor has remained in this state since that time. The Indiana Governors based their action on the theory that it was plain that Taylor could not get a fair trial if he should be consigned to the friends of Goebel. To send the man back to Kentucky meant his death, with certainty, either by pretended legal process after a mock trial before a prejudiced Judge and a packed Jury, or by assassination at the hands of some of the fierce partisans of the dead Goebel. In the interests of humanity the Indiana Governors put aside the question of complicity between states. They declined to deliver Taylor over to the ravening Kentucky wolves. The people of Indiana supported them in their action with respect to the demand for the extradition of Taylor. Attempts by the opposition political press and speakers to make political capital of it were met with derision. If there is one thing that the American people are sticklers for it is fair play, and every man of common sense knew, and knows, that Taylor, innocent or guilty, would be in Kentucky as a lamb in a tiger's lair. So the people of this great state approved the course of our Governors in making Indiana a place of refuge for an accused man who could not possibly have a fair and impartial trial for his life.

It was not a question of his guilt. The Indiana Governors did not pass on that. But in the face of the certainty that his conviction would follow his return to Kentucky, guilty or not guilty, they refused to become party to his death. That was all there was to it, and we believe that every fair man should uphold them.

The opinion sometimes is expressed that Taylor showed a want of physical bravery and moral courage in fleeing from Kentucky; that he should have stood his ground, let the consequences be what they might. Perhaps this is true. Every man who takes high office runs the risk of assassination. Within forty years three Presidents of the United States have been murdered. History records the sad stories of many men who have felt the ax, the knife or the cord as the result of political persecution and unspeakable partisan malice. But life is sweet. Governor Taylor had a wife and many young children who looked to him. It is not for us to say that he is coward because he sought to escape from sure death and preserve himself for his family.

All in all, it is proper that the Indiana authorities have had the public approval in the case of Taylor. It would be a mean reflection on our humanity should this state surrender him to his implacable political foes to undergo a farcical trial in a Court where there is no justice for him.
